Subject	Comment Opposing Deregulation of Amateur Radio Frequency Allocations (GN Docket No. 25-133)

Dear FCC Commissioners,

I am submitting this comment in response to GN Docket No. 25-133 regarding the Commission's retrospective review of regulations. I urge the Commission to preserve the rules and frequency allocations governing the Amateur Radio Service, which provides a critical, non-commercial public benefit to the United States.

At the time of this writing, over 330+ individuals have signed a petition to safeguard amateur radio from deregulation or reallocation. The petition and supporting materials can be viewed here: https://hamadvocate.org and https://www.change.org/p/safeguard-amateur-radio-frequency-allocations

While amateur radio is often viewed as a hobby, it has long served as a pillar of national emergency response, STEM education, rural communication access, and cybersecurity resilience.

Cost-Benefit Considerations:

- The Amateur Radio Service delivers enormous public value at no cost to taxpayers. In times of disaster—when cell towers and internet infrastructure fail—amateur radio steps in.
- From Hurricane Katrina to Hurricane Maria, from California wildfires to local search and rescue missions, amateur operators have delivered lifesaving communications under real-world pressure.
- Amateur radio is not a theoretical backup. It is tested, proven, and maintained entirely by licensed volunteers, trained in emergency operations, often in coordination with FEMA, the Red Cross, and local emergency management teams.

Implementation Experience:

- Regulations governing amateur radio have produced consistent public benefit for nearly a century.
- During public events (e.g., marathons, parades), ham operators routinely provide logistical support and safety monitoring, freeing up public safety radio systems and enabling real-time response.

- In global emergencies like the Indian Ocean tsunami and Turkey-Syria earthquake, amateur radio enabled communications when all other infrastructure failed.

Marketplace and Technological Changes:

- Amateur radio is not redundant. Commercial systems are centralized, vulnerable to cyberattack, power loss, and overload.
- Amateur radio is decentralized and infrastructure-independent, making it one of the few resilient communication systems available during national emergencies.

Barrier to Entry / Equity Considerations:

- Deregulating or reallocating amateur frequencies to commercial entities would disproportionately harm students, retirees, educators, public volunteers, and emergency responders who rely on access to this resource.
- Many technologists, including engineers who built modern communication systems, got their start on ham radio. Amateur radio fosters skills in electronics, digital communication, and RF technology.

Regulatory Ecosystem Fit:

- Amateur radio is a partner, not a competitor, in the regulatory ecosystem. It does not generate commercial revenue, but it supports public safety, education, and national resilience.
- Any deregulation that weakens or removes protections for ham radio threatens these contributions.

We respectfully request that the Commission:

- Preserve all current amateur frequency allocations.
- Retain the regulatory framework that enables coordination, licensing, and community safety.
- Recognize that this service delivers a unique, proven, and irreplaceable public benefit.

Thank you for your careful consideration.

Sincerely,
David Mancini, MSN, RN, LP, KJ5BBP

> "HAM Radio is not just for the operators. There are countless who simply listen. On March 19, 2025, a wave of wildfires broke out across the state of Arkansas. I was listening to local Fire Department channels to be prepared in case I would need to evacuate. Before that, on March 14, 2025 a wave of tornadoes swept through Arkansas. Again, I was listening to local weather stations to prepare for the possibility of evacuation. The FCC needs to keep its personnel to maintain the future of amateur radio and our ability to communicate with or listen to each other, especially in the event of life-threatening situations. Thank you for your time and consideration."

> "Amateur 'Ham' radio serves many purposes. Experimental, research, testing, developmental(communications software, SDR radios). But what if the internet is taken out somehow??? Amateur radio, FRS,GMRS,MURS... even CB frequencies could all be used as a communications backbone during emergencies and disasters. Keeping us on the air is a practice for us to keep going. There are many operators in the ham radio community who are filled with tons of education and we can all learn from each other too. It has a big footprint as far as education goes as well. If cell towers and any infrastructure get compromised and no one has internet, wifi, and or a signal to their cellular device... then what do we have? oooooh ham radio comes to life in these scenarios! Even if power goes out, there's always some expert operators ready to operate on battery power and emergency setups!"

> "As an amateur radio operator, I believe reducing our airwaves would significantly hinder the vital role we play in emergency communications, community support, and global connectivity. Amateur radio isn't just a hobby; it's a critical resource during natural disasters when traditional communication networks fail. The diverse frequencies we utilize allow us to adapt and innovate, fostering technological advancements and lifelong learning. Limiting our spectrum would not only stifle this growth but also weaken a resilient system that communities worldwide rely on in times of crisis."
